GCSEs and IGCSEs

PROSPECTUS

LEARNING WITH HIGH POTENTIALITY

IGCSEs, or International GCSEs, were originally developed for UK students living abroad so that they could study UK qualifications. The main difference used to be the lack of coursework in the IGCSE, but since coursework has now been removed from most GCSE courses, there is little difference between the two. Depending on the subject, there may be small differences in the way the course is structured and assessed.

IGCSEs were reviewed by NARIC (the UK National Recognition Information Centre) and established as grade-to-grade equivalent to GCSEs as recognized by all UK colleges, universities, training providers and employers. IGCSEs are also recognized globally. The UK school system generally provides GCSEs, but private schools often provide IGCSEs or both.

The main difference between the standard UK A Level and the CIE International A Level (IAL) is that in the IAL, the AS level counts toward the A Level grade. This means that you will sit all of the exams and they will all contribute to your overall A Level grade. The standard UK AS is completely separate. Students choose to either do the AS or the A Level. Additionally, IALs tend not to have coursework whereas some of the A Levels do.

Reviews of our courses

PROSPECTUS

Rebecca Francis

My son is undertaking a number of IGCSEs and we have both been really happy with the service received and the help from tutors when my son has needed it. My son has progressed really well and managed to complete 3 of his iGCSEs in just 6 months!

We highly value all our guardian's thoughts on us. Our management team tries hard to accompany every students in every possible way to get along with our education system. Let's see what our guardians think about us.

Peter Maxwell

'They are absolutely brilliant. Any questions someone will always get back to you (always sooner than you think) tutor response is always quick also. I will be doing plenty more courses with them. Thank you so much.'
